District Attorney Jerome during the trial. He said:

"We have no right, if the real facts were known, to be here trying this man, and would be absolutely prohibited by the statutes?

"Had you heard these words," continued the attorney, "from some irresponsible bubbler, instead of from an official charged with a great public duty; had they been spoken in a place where dide men resort to induke in idle talk, instead of in a tribunal wherein justice presided in solemnity; had the occasion on which they were uttered been some trivial discussion on some insignificant topic, instead of the some insignificant topic, instead of the consistency of the same of the sam on some insignificant topic, instead of a debute, the issue of which is life or death, and had you, after so hearing them, heard the same lips make an uppent to prove that the law demanded forfeit of the life of the man about whom they were spoken, these words might not have filled you with amazement.

"It is to prevent such a conclusion in this case," went on Mr. Delmas, "that I have undertaken the performance of the onerous task before me. In this task it will be my duty to give you all the help in my power in teding the question before you."

Mr. Delmas then gave a resume of Evelyn Nesbit's life from her birth in 1884 to the time she met Stanford White. Continuing, he said:

Pursuit of a Child.

Pursuit of a Child.

"Brave and courageous, we find this child of fifteen or sixteen years of age, rushing in the daytime from studio to studio, earning $16$ to $18$ a week, and at night appearing upon the boards and earning an equal salary.

"At this time we find a man whose hair was tinged with gray, who had an excellent wife and an accomplished son, fixing his eyes upon the fatel child and determining to make her his. To win her he had none of the week, and at night appearing upon the boards and earning an equal salary.

"At this time we find a man whose hair was tinged with gray, who had an excellent wife and an accomplished son, fixing his eyes upon the fated child and determining to make her his. To win her he had none of the graces or principles of the honorable suitor. He introduced himself into he confidence of the mother and established himself in a paternal and protecting attitude in the family, and when his footing was sure he persuaded the mother to absent herself from the city, assuring her that the child would be safe in his hands and telling her how fortunate it was that there was such a protector to watch over her.

"In one of these dens, fitted up with all the beauty and taste which this he had a many wind. No cannel of the one human being who came as an angel into the life of this girl of the downward path, who told the girl that whatever she might be in the downward path, who told the cys of a sinful and debauched world, he knew her soul was pure. "He said: 'Yes, I know that your fault; I know you are an unfortunate and betrayed girl; but come to mad I will protect you. About your form I will throw the sfrong arm of a man, I will fight the battles of life with you at my side. No matter what others may think of you, I think you are an angel. To me you are fairer than Rachel at the well or Ruth in the fields."

"In one of these dens, fitted up with all the beauty and taste which this man of genius possessed—into one of these dens this child was lured and found herself alone with this man, old enough to be her father—the man who was her protector.

Defiled the Image of God.

"Must I tell you how she was led on, step by step; how she was plied with wine and drugs, and finally became his victim? That story you have heard from that child's faltering lips. Better that he should never have lived than to have lived to have heard the cries of anguish of the victim who ries of anguish of the victim who lay before him. He had committed the greatest crime that ever deflied the image of God. He had lured to destruction and had crushed the child who had trusted him. He had committed a crime against the law, against the law of this State, a crime that the whole magistrate of this country, in a message to Congress, said should be punished by death. "Had this man forcotten that when our

be at hand?"

Mr. Delmas recounted how White had poisoned the mind of the girl by telling her that she had committed no wrong. When Mr. Delmas had completed his denunciation of Stanford White, he launched into a merciless attack on Evelyn Thaw's mother. He first recalled to the jury that in the early part of the trial, when the name of Mrs. Nesbit was first mentioned, he stated that he would not cast any reflections upon her and her guiltless name, believing ther to have been the helpless' victim of circumstances.

"When I said this, gentlemen," Mr. Delmas continued, "I wish you to hear in mind that three things had not yet developed—that for years after this assault had been committed upon this girl, the mother received $300 a month from the ravisher; that the mother had given to the district attorney a written statement by which he might torture the soul of her daughter, by which he might leave her alone in the world—her father dead, her mother unnatural, her husband executed.

Unnatural Mother.

"When I learned that every shaft simed, at her heart came from a quiver supplied by her mother; when I learned that it was the mother who was pointing out the sore and tender spots for the district attorney to attack, and when I learned that the poor babblings of a girl in school—her diary—had been furnished by the mother that they might be used against her daughter, I retracted as I retract now, the

I have even seen a little bird watching over her brood of young ones playing in a dusty road, ruffle her brave little feathers until she was twice her natural size and fly straight at a pointer who had come running up until the dog stood abashed and respected her motherhood.

Shame Upon Such a Woman.

Mr. Delmas next went into a long discussion as to whether or not it was true Evelyn Nesbit had told her story to Thaw in Paris in 1903. That, he declared, was the main question of the

"You have seen Evelyn Thaw on the stand," he said. "You have for days watched her manner of testifying. From your experience as men of the world, you can tell whether or not this child—for child she is to-day not this child—for child she is to-day— is a cunning actress, who was repeat-ing a story she had learned and re-hearsed. You saw her countenance; you saw how horror overspread it when she told that terrible story."

Delmas quoted at length from Thaw's letters to Mr. Longfellow from Parts in 1993, which he claimed proved Evelyn Nesbit told Thaw her story.

Contrasted the Mothers.

The attorney declared that Thaw had no occasion to lie to his mother mad no occasion to lie to his mother when he told her the story in Pittsburg after his return from Europe. In contrast to the mother of Evelyn Nesbit, Mr. Delmas pictured the mother of Harry Thuw. He reviewed the testimony she gave on the stand ampointed to the love and affection she displayed for her son when he began to display that restlessness which culminated in the tragedy. He spoke in eulogistic terms of her noble character and of the sacrifices she made to lighten the burden and ease the pain of her heartbroken boy.

Mrs. Thaw listened to the compliments paid her without evincing emotion. Her children sat stolld as ever. Evelyn Thaw was only slightly moved by the attack on her mother, and as a matter of fact, her features were immobile throughout the address.

After paying his tribute to Mrs.
Thaw, Mr. Delmas rehearsed the evidence which related to the attentions which Thaw paid to Evelyn, laying particular stress upon that portion which referred to his visits to Pompton, N. He spoke in the tenderest of tones of Thaw's visit to the cirt's hedside when she was ill. the tenderest of tones of Thaw's visit to the girl's bedside when she was ill, of his deep concern for her when she was convalescing, and of his efforts to restore her to health. He declared that Thaw was then paying honorable court to Evelyn, and made her an honorable proposal of marriage soon afterward in Paris.

Mr. Delmas's voice had grown quite husky by this time, and he asked for an adjournment until to-morrow morning.

District Attorney Jerome was not in court to hear Mr. Delmas's speech. His assistant, Mr. Garvan, took notes, however, as Mr. Jerome, it is said, was busy with the preparation of his own address.

Mr. Jerome made a similar announcement, and an adjournment was ordered until 2 o'clock that the jurors, who were to be deprived of their liberty, might adjust their businessy affairs.

REV. DR. MENZEL DIES SUDDENLY

Widely-Known Minister Passes Away After Very Brief 19. Illness.

After an illness of but a few hours Rev. Dr. Paul Louis Menzel, pastor of St. John's German Evangelical Church, one of the most widely known ministers in the South, died at 11:45 o'clock yest-rday morning at his home, No. 714 East Marshall Street.

Aithough Dr. Menzel had been in more or less infirm health for some time, he conducted service at his church Sunday, preaching in the morning. Until late that night his condition was not considered serious. To his congregation, as to his relatives, the news of his death came as a profound shock. In the course of many years of carnest work among them Dr. Monzel had won the hearts of his people to such an extent that his removal meant genuine sorrow to all. By his scholarly attainments and varied accomplishments Dr. Menzel had long occupied a prominent position in the life of the community itself, and in scarcely a lesser degree throughout the entire city was the feeling of St. John's congregation marked.

After his father's doath, in 1874, Dr. Monzel left the old countries and came to the United States, where, in September, 1874, he accepted a call as pastor of the two German Lutheran Churches of Dansville and Perkinsville, in Western New York. In 1880 he accepted a call as pastor of the German Evangelical Protestant Church in Albany, N. Y. During his pastorate there the heautiful new church building of that congregation was erected. His influence began also to make itself feit in wider circles. He was instrumental in the formation of the Atlantic District of the German Evangelical Synod of North America, and served for many years as secretany, then as president, of that district.
